ABOUT ELYSA

Truth blossoms in the middle of opposite extremes.

Between the dark and the light, a confident balance occurs. Estonia-born and Los Angeles-based pop songstress Elysa thrives in the centre of a similar spectrum. On one side, her emotionally charged delivery carries explosive, yet tender ballads. On the other, she comes to life as an independent and powerful provocateur whose crazy and sexy fearlessness immediately inspires high levels of energy and spirit. This can even happen within the span of the same song, cementing her as fresh force for popular music and culture.

"There are definitely two sides of me," she exclaims. "Sometimes, I'm on the darker side. Other times, I'm on the lighter side. My songs show both. I'll sing from my soul about my emotions, and then I'll turn up and go completely crazy. I'll jump from one extreme to the other. Those two opposites really attract." Her story itself hinges on such a dichotomy as it begins 5,753 miles away from L.A. in her native Estonia. Growing up in a tiny country of under 1 million residents, she retreated into music at a young age, obsessing over the likes of Rihanna, Christina Aguilera, Britney Spears, and Céline Dion. After music school at just eight-years-old, she began penning songs in junior high. Making a name for herself locally, 2015 saw her enter the national pre-selection for the world-renowned Eurovision Song Contest. Placing third, she rose to immense popularity in Estonia in addition to touring all over the country. She also started to make a name for herself throughout Europe.
